Your objective as an author is always to write as much as possible each day. You think and write and rewrite and do research and develop characters and plot. It isn't until you stop all the background noise that you see what you've written. It's so easy to get caught up in turning out product that we lose sight of whether we're actually saying what we want to say. That's why it's absolutely essential to take time away from your manuscript every few days, if not every day, to clear your mind completely. The author Jodi Taylor has been an avid consumer of Science Fiction since childhood, describing herself as "an insatiable reader of Science Fiction since the age of eleven" (Taylor). Taylor's first book written, which was also her first published novel, was entitled "Father of the Rain". Taylor has noticed that the genre of Science Fiction has become more popular within recent years, due to the advances in technology which make it possible for us to explore new worlds. Taylor credits her passion for Science Fiction to authors such as Isaac Asimov and Arthur C. Clarke. Taylor is the youngest winner ever of the Sara Douglass Award for New Writer of the Year. She won this award after she had published only one novel with an emphasis on Science Fiction - "Father of the Rain". This Science Fiction novel is centered around a man named Saul Garamond who is living on an Earth-like planet called Eden. As a young boy, Garamond is told the story of an ancient 'Father of the Rain,' who looked after Eden and it's people. Over the years Garamond has his faith tested in many ways. He must make many sacrifices and face many hardships, but he continues to believe in the Father of the Rain. Kushiel's Dart is a Science Fiction Romance set in a distant future where humans have conquered much of creation and brought peace to what was once a barbaric universe under god's rule alone. In this future created by author Jacqueline Carey, there are seven different races that inhabit creation, with humans being at the top of this hierarchy. The story is set thousands of years after the previous wars, and focuses on a single woman; Ehsieh, a Human female who has been bred to accept the obligations of her position in life. A role that can only be filled by a female and one that involves bearing children for an elite class of men known as the D'Angelines (witches). One day, Ehsieh is wickedly tempted by a beautiful warrior who wants to overthrow the ruling class and overthrow the men in power. A role that has been assigned to her for centuries by her father, and one she is sworn to uphold. She must put aside her desire for revenge and choose whether to continue with her mission or become herself once more.
