According to Gartner | No CommentsComparing Age-Gender-Race Differences in the Attentional Inhibition of Go/No Go Reaction Time. The purpose of this study is to examine age, gender, and race differences in the attentional inhibition of reaction time (RT), in a Go/No Go paradigm. Specifically, we examine a) how age, gender, and race influence Go RT and b) whether the inhibition of Go RT differs between attentionally neutral (GNG-N) and attentionally selected (GNG-S) task conditions. A sample of participants (n = 327) was recruited from the Duke University campus. Regression analyses show that age and race are significantly correlated with the inhibition of Go RT, whereas gender shows only a marginally significant relationship. Females exhibit longer Go RT than males, and Blacks are slower than Whites, even when accounting for age and education. Finally, in the GNG-S condition, there is no age difference in the inhibition of Go RT, and Blacks and Whites show no differences in the inhibition of Go RT, but there is a significant gender difference, with females exhibiting longer Go RT than males. Overall, we find that only age and race are significantly related to the inhibition of Go RT, with participants from the older age groups showing slower Go RT. This finding has important implications for the literature regarding the age-related attentional inhibition of RT. it's pretty bad. I think I'm going to upgrade, even though $350 + $100 + $18 for an external antenna isn't exactly enticing to me. It's just not worth the piper once I have it.
